

cork-soled shoe affords better protection than a double leather sole and is much lighter. Their use is increasing; would increase faster but for two reasons: shoemakers charge too much for real cork soles, and shoedealers sell many that have only a cork edge instead of a sole.

We have a grade made of French calfskin, hand-sewed, for $7.50. Another of domestic calfskin, handwelt, $5. And both have a complete layer of cork under every sole.
